

THE SPLIT IN THE PARTY.

SIX DEMOCRATIC SENATORS VOTE AGAINST LIQUOR-GOV. SHEEHAN.

The Cohoes Election Inspectors Bill Passed in the Senate, 17 to 8—Sheehan Declined to Certify to Its Passage—Notorious Session in the Assembly Over the Albany Water Bill—There Were Enough Votes to Pass It, but Mr. Sulzer, Who Was in the Chair, Abruptly Adjourned the Assembly and Left the Chair—The Speedy Repeal Bill Passed in the Senate.

ALBANY, April 1.—Senator Parker of Albany passed the Cohoes Election Inspectors bill through the Senate to-day over the heads of Lieut.-Gov. Sheehan and Senator Cantor. The vote was 17 to 8. A majority of the Democratic senators voted for the bill. Parker is with him, and five against him, of whom Senator Cantor and Senator Endres of the Lieutenant-Governor's district were two. This was a test vote, and it appears from it that if a Democratic caucus were called to discipline Senator Parker, he would be able to get a majority of the votes and vote the Lieutenant-Governor and Senator Cantor into line, instead of being whipped in himself. The Democratic Senators voting with Senator Parker were Bloodgood of Catskill, Brown of New York, McCareen of Brooklyn, McClelland of Westchester, and Osborne of Dutchess. The five negative votes were cast by Senators Albany, Deane, DeLoach of New York, Endres of Buffalo, and Floyd-Jones of Long Island. Senators Hazan, McLaughlin, and Joseph of New York, Nichols of Onondaga, McCarty of Kings, and Walker of Steuben, Democrats, did not vote.

Some Cleveland and Kodak newspapers have been trying to make a story out of this bill, and to claim that the Democratic Senators in Cleveland. Of the seventeen Democratic Senators, three or four at the most can be said to be Cleveland men. This morning's vote is in no sense a Cleveland victory. The issue was whether the local or the State Democratic organizations should control in any way the Albany and Troy Democrats, who have local bills which they want passed, and they naturally sided with Senator Parker to support his bill, which the Democratic Assemblymen and Senator and the regular organization of Albany county favor.

Senator Hill in his recent visit to Albany was asked to interfere in the matter. He said that he did not intend to interfere in local politics, but that every locality must look out for itself, and that in any fight between two localities on local matters they should be left to fight it out. Gov. Flower took the same position, though, of course, he, as well as Senator Hill, strongly disapproved of the kind of a party caucus which the Albany and Troy Democrats have been trying to conduct their fights outside the legislature. The result has been foreseen for some time, and it caused some surprise that the Lieutenant-Governor and Senator Cantor persisted in going on to almost certain defeat. Even the Tammany Senators, who are generally in favor of the bill, which can be said to be a test vote, and it caused some surprise that the Lieutenant-Governor and Senator Cantor persisted in going on to almost certain defeat.

Senator Cantor replied that he reserved to his own party the right to pass any bill which they saw fit to pass. He said that he would not vote for the bill, but that he would not vote against it either. He said that he would not vote for the bill, but that he would not vote against it either. NEW BOOKS.

Brief Reviews of Important and Interesting New Publications.

Every discriminating and rightly constituted reader must admire the skill and respect the sentiment distinguishing Mr. J. M. Barrie's new novel, "The Little Minister" (Lovell). The hero is a very earnest little minister with tendencies, controlled nearly always by a notably large supply of courage and will. It is the combination of gentleness and strength which recommends him to everybody in Thrum's when he enters upon the charge of the Auld Licht Kirk in a community of well-to-do and ostentatious weavers called by the church authorities in Glasgow the mouth of hell. He is barely 21 at the time the tale has to do with him, so it is entirely natural that the very singular girl known as the Egyptian, with her astonishing eyes and all her remarkable capacities for exciting men's emotions, should have influenced him powerfully. It may not be quite reasonable to suppose that she could, within an hour after he has first set eyes upon her, so palely his will as to be able to induce him to become an actual rioter and to throw a clod of earth at a Captain of the British army whose title she altogether respects; but to permit the little minister to be so completely dominated by the power of the Egyptian and adds to the surprising quality of the tale. The dramatic art of the author is very generously applied all through this novel. Little or nothing is permitted to stand in the way of it. Improbability of incident is not necessarily avoided by the author, but it is not to be taken too seriously, but some improbable incidents are less happy than others, and the incident of the meeting of the Egyptian and the drunken weaver's little boy, in the course of which the little boy exhorts this lovely young person to depart from Thrum's, to the end that the little minister may be free to exercise an undisturbed influence on the Egyptian, is a fortunate habit of the weaver, his father, seems to us to be less felicitous than it might be. But the weaver's absurd little boy is no great matter in the story, though he is dignified by an illustration. He hinders but he cannot permanently arrest the loving march between the Egyptian and the minister, which is one of the most charming bits of emotional business to be found in any book. It is glorious that Mr. Barrie permits it to come to light. Momentous things befall while the 10 o'clock bell is ringing in Thrum's that night when the storm breaks and the cliff falls into the loch and the flood sweeps down the glen to the sea. The rest of the story are abroad and racing around at cross purposes in the fearful gloom. It seems inevitable that the melancholy realism so usual in contemporary fiction is to be applied here, and that it is not applied is the final surprise and the culminating great delight of this exceptionally able and charming story.

"The Question of Silver," by Louis R. Erich (Putnam), is a summary of the legislation regarding silver in this country, and an analysis of the arguments of the advocates of unlimited coinage. The author is opposed to such coinage.

"Monsieur Henri," by Louise Imogen Guiney (Harper & Brothers), is a study, and a very well written and effective one, of Henri du Vergier de La Rochejaquelein, a figure of the war in the Vendée. "Stories from English History for Young Americans," a collection of illustrations, comes from the same publisher.

"The Handbook Illustrated Dictionary of the English Language," a new and enlarged edition of the "Pronouncing Dictionary," is issued by the Putnam's. It is convenient, printed with notable clearness, and abundantly illustrated.

AMERICAN ARCHITECTURE.

Studies. By MONTGOMERY SCHUYLER. With Illustrations. 8vo, Full Leather, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $2.50.

This beautiful volume is, as its title purports, a series of studies in American architecture, not only presenting glimpses of the best examples of architectural art in this country, but offering many valuable suggestions for the improvement of that art by bringing it more into harmony and identity with the art of building.

THE QUALITY OF MERCY. A NOVEL. BY WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS. Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.50. This story will easily take rank among the best that Mr. Howells has written. It possesses all those distinguishing qualities of invention and style which have made his previous works so popular, and its realistic but semi-tragic plot is most artistically wrought out from the beginning.
